

Home Office

If you operate a business from home, freelance, or work from home on certain days, there are great ways to share that experience. Develop an agenda that will allow your child to see the many tasks you perform. Throughout the day, explain the benefits and challenges of working from home and demonstrate how you communicate to clients, colleagues, or supervisors. Use the Ask the Adults activity to share insights about how you manage work and family life.

Have your child fax items, draft a newsletter article, or make a reservation for the two of you for lunch. If your job requires tasks outside, such as meetings, take your child along (make sure you inform the party you are meeting with beforehand).
